THE KEY-NOTE of the NEW SERIES which is just begun is struck in the words "for the young of all ages." Its speciality is that it is adapted to all the members of the family—that it is such as the child can enjoy by itself, such as the grown-up person can also enjoy by himself, and above all such as the two can enjoy together. It endeavours to combine instruction and recreation, and to be altogether so attractive in its character as to be able "to hold the children from their play and draw the old man from his place in the chimney corner."
